Pedagogical English Grammar Fall 2019 Syllabus

Instructor: Dr. Gordon Myskow

Email: myskow-g@kanda.kuis.ac.jp

Course description

As a pedagogical grammar course, our focus is not only on the forms and functions of English grammar but the strategies and techniques for teaching and learning them. As such, the course has three principle aims. The first aim is to become more familiar with the patterns and rules of English syntax (i.e., grammatical form(s)). To achieve this, it is essential that we possess a shared terminology to talk about grammar, including grammatical categories and phrase structure rules. The second aim of the course is to explore the meaning and use of grammatical constructions. All aspects of language, including their grammatical structures, are used by speakers and writers to communicate with others in order to perform social activities, and thus the meaning and use of grammar will be an important focus of the course. Some attention will also be devoted to the meanings of grammatical constructions beyond the clause at the textual or discourse level. The third aim of the course is to develop pedagogical strategies and techniques for grammar instruction. Among the issues treated in the course will be the distinction between inductive and deductive instructional approaches, the sequencing of language-focused instruction in the syllabus and lessons, as well as language analysis techniques such as ‘noticing’ and ‘grammaring’. Student-teachers will have a chance to apply these principles by developing and teaching their own lessons and activities.
